

When users open the website, they will clearly see the navigation bar, which they can click on to know more about a specific aspect of the bakery or perform a task. Scrolling down on the home page, the user can scroll through the slideshow at the top, then check out featured events, and continue onto to see the bakery's press and meet the footer. If they click on the image for weddings for example, it'll take them to that part of the page on the food page. Clicking order on the navigation bar brings up a pie order form, whereas clicking Contact brings up an inquiry form - both are easy to fill out and straightforward. If the user clicks on visit us, they are greeted with a map so they can find directions, then scrolling down they see the hours and other relevant information, and when the bakery is busiest. For all of the website, the pages are broken up into horizontal divs, wherein a grid structure is used. The sticky header on the top stays with the user as they scroll down, allowing for the user to navigate between pages easily.
